Breadth Beyond Borders: Center on Disability Studies International Partnerships

Through individualized planning and collaborative action, CDS' international partnerships are transformational relationships between senior faculty members across borders. Strategically, our faculty members have advanced institutional goals in areas of inclusion, academics, employment, and assistive technology. This has been accomplished through recent visiting scholar programs, contributions to international grants and empirical research, participation at the Pac Rim Conferences, and much more.

Summer 2021 Disability Studies Course: July 6 - Aug 13, 2021

DIS 687 Seminar on Disability Issues Topic: Representations of Disability in Film

This intensive summer course provides a walk through film history through the lens of disability. By viewing and responding to films about disability, students are invited to both interrogate their own assumptions about disability and deepen their understanding of the ways in which the "grammar" of film helps shape depictions of disability.

The popular seminar invites students to develop an understanding of the ways these cinematic constructions dialog with culture, at times reinforcing cultural scripts about disability and at other times, helping us imagine new ones.

Dr. Raphael is a film and disability researcher and also serves as independent researcher for the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, Oscars Oral History Project, supporting their efforts of documenting the neglected contributions of underrepresented artists and craftspeople to the industry.

Interdisciplinary Graduate Certificate in Disability and Diversity Studies

Sponsored by the Center on Disability Studies, University of Hawai'i at Mānoa, this 15 credit graduate-level (master's, doctoral, and post-doctoral) online-program offers students an interdisciplinary approach to disability and diversity issues. The program attracts students across disciplines and across the globe.

For more information on applying to the program or courses, contact the Training and Instruction Coordinator Dr. Thomas Conway at tconway@hawaii.edu.

Call for Proposals Special Issue: Disability and Film and Media

DUE: July 31, 2021 at rdsjournal.org

Film and Media can play a profound role in the ways in which cultures both reflect and develop their understandings of identity. The ways in which disability is imagined on the screen can have real impact on efforts for inclusion in a variety of domains in the real world. In the wake of the success in recent years of social justice movements like Black Lives Matter and #MeToo, there is increasing international attention to disability rights and activism. There is also increasing concern about equity on screen, both in terms of the presence of characters as well as opportunities for performers.

This special issue will be devoted to considering Disability and Film and Media. Guest editors will be renowned media scholar Beth Haller (Towson University) and noted film scholar, historian and activist Lawrence Carter-Long (Disability Rights Education and Defense Fund DREDF). Questions may be addressed to rdsj@hawaii.edu.

For this conversation about representation of disability in film and media, work from both academics and non-academics will be welcomed. Topics may include:

- Representation in TV, film, or other media forms
- Disability, film, media and equity
- Portrayal of characters with disabilities by nondisabled actors
- Intersectional and/or cross-cultural analysis
- Historical contributions
- Regional profiles
- Statement by artists (including film and media makers and actors)
- Reception studies
- Alternative disability aesthetics
- Disability and Oscars (and other awards)
- Disabled star profiles
- Disability and genre
- Disability and news
- Disability and social media
- Disability and Children's media

CELEBRATING CDS

Oral History Project

The Center on Disability Studies (CDS), College of Education, has initiated a long term Oral History Project, capturing the voices of those essential to the formation of CDS and documenting the ongoing impact of the Center. All of this will be placed in the context of the larger inter/national history of disability activism and advocacy.

In addition to reflecting the unique history of CDS, the project also seeks, where relevant, to distill lessons from the experience of participants that may be useful in building capacity of others at CDS. For example, the recent Funding Masterclass with Robert Stodden provides capacity-building lessons on funding and grant development

<https://tinyurl.com/cds-rainmaker>.

In addition to interviews gathered in the project, the collection will eventually also be part of a physical campus exhibition celebrating the history and ongoing work of CDS.
